No change in the ECB's stance

Financial Scenarios Unit With the participation of: Agustín García

- The ECB has left interest rates unchanged
- The ECB says monetary policy to diverge from the Fed and the BoE for a long time

• No hints of policy change in the near term

As expected, at today's monetary policy meeting, the ECB left the key policy rate unchanged at 0.15% and took no additional steps on non-standard measures. Mr. Draghi reiterated the unanimity within the Governing Council (GC) on their willingness to use unconventional monetary policy within their mandate if necessary, pledging that they will maintain a high degree of accommodation. On the economic outlook, medium-term inflation risks remain "broadly balanced" and risks to the economic outlook continue to be to the downside.

Mr. Draghi remained cautious on the economic outlook. He stated that the recovery is growing, but he warned that this growth continues to be "moderate, fragile and uneven". In particular, on recent economic data, he stated that they were somewhat volatile, clarifying that soft data has been better on average than hard data, which was disappointing. He said that there has been a slowdown in growth momentum, stressing those countries that "have undertaken reforms are performing better than countries that have not done so." In this context, he showed concerns about the increasing geopolitical risks around the world, stating that the conflict in Russia will have more impact on the eurozone than in other regions. On inflation, he pointed out that the drop in annual inflation to 0.4% in July was mainly due to the fall in energy prices, saying that core inflation (excluding energy and food) remained at 0.8%. Moreover, he said that long-term inflation expectations remain anchored at 2% although a decline in short-term expectations has occurred. He highlighted that the negative inflation rates in some countries reflected not only the lack of demand, but also adjustments in the economy, and thus he does not see self-fulfilling expectations for falling prices.

The ECB's statement included an explicit reference to monetary policy measures taken in June, stating that this package "is in line with its forward guidance and adequately reflects the outlook for the euro area economy as well as the differences in terms of the monetary policy cycle between major advanced economies." Regarding this, Mr. Draghi highlighted that markets have realised that the monetary policy paths in the eurozone and in the US will remain divergent for a long time. Moreover, he stressed that this package of measures also helped to weaken the euro, clarifying that the fundamentals for a weaker exchange rate are better now than few months ago.

In response to a question about the recent bail-out of Banco Espirito Santo, he highlighted the swift and effective action taken by the Portuguese authorities in addressing a situation which has the potential to be complex. He stressed that, with this decision, what could have been viewed as a systemic incident "is now restricted to this bank."

As at the July meeting, Mr Draghi did not give any hints about action to be taken in the short term. We expect the ECB to remain on hold, monitoring the impact of the measures announced in June.

Mario Draghi, President of the ECB, Frankfurt am Main, 3 July7 August 2014

Ladies and gentlemen, the Vice-President and I are very pleased to welcome you to our press conference. We will now report on the outcome of today's meeting of the Governing Council.

Based on our regular economic and monetary analyses, we decided to keep the the key ECB-ECB_interest rates unchanged. The latest-available_information signals that the euro area economy_remains consistent with our assessment of a continued its-moderate and uneven recovery in the second quarter, of the euro area economy, with low rates of inflation and subdued monetary and credit growth-dynamics. At the same time, inflation expectations for the euro area over the medium to long term continue to be firmly anchored in line with our aim of maintaining inflation rates below, but close to, 2%. The combination of monetary policy measures decided last month has already-in early June have led to a further an easing of the monetary policy stance. The monetary operations to take place over the coming months will add to this accommedation and will support bank lending. This is in line with our forward guidance and adequately reflects the outlook for the euro area economy, as well as the differences in terms of the monetary policy cycle between major advanced economies. The targeted longer-term refinancing operations (TLTROS) that are to take place over the coming funding at attractive terms and conditions over a period of up to four years for all banks that meet certain benchmarks applicable to their lending to the real economy. This should help to ease funding conditions further and stimulate credit provision to the real economy. As our measures work their way through to the economy-the will contribute to a return of inflation rates to levels closer to 2%.

As stated previously, and as a follow-up to our decision in early June, we have intensified preparatory work related to outright purchases in the asset-backed securities market to enhance the functioning of the monetary policy transmission mechanism.

Looking ahead, we will maintain a high degree of monetary accommodation. Concerning our forward guidance, the key ECB interest rates will remain at present levels for an extended period of time in view of the current outlook for inflation. Moreover, the Governing Council is unanimous in its commitment to also using unconventional instruments within its mandate, should it become necessary to further address risks of too prolonged a period of low inflation. We are strongly determined to safeguard the firm anchoring of inflation expectations over the medium to long term.

As a follow-up to the decisions taken in early June, the Governing Council today also decided on specific modalities for the targeted longer-term refinancing operations (TLTROs). The aim of the TLTROs is to enhance the functioning of the monetary policy transmission mechanism by supporting lending to the real economy. A press release on the modalities for the TLTROs will be published today at 3.30 p.m. As announced last month, we have also started to intensify preparatory work related to outright purchases in the ABS market to enhance the functioning of the monetary policy transmission mechanism.

Let me now explain our assessment in greater detail, starting with the economic analysis. RealIn the first quarter of this year euro area real GDP in the euro area rose by 0.2%, quarter on quarter, in the first quarter of this year. Economic indicators, including survey results available up to June, signal a continuation of the very gradual recovery in the second quarter of 2014. With regard to the second quarter, monthly indicators have been somewhat volatile, partly reflecting technical factors. Overall, recent information, including survey data available for July, remains consistent with our expectation of a continued moderate and uneven recovery of the euro area economy. Looking ahead, domestic demand should be supported by a number of factors, including the further accommodation in the accommodative monetary policy stance and the ongoing improvements in financingfinancial conditions. In addition, the progress made in fiscal consolidation and structural reforms, as well as gains in real disposable income, should make a positive contribution to economic growth. Furthermore, demand for exports should benefit from the ongoing global recovery. However, although labour markets have shown some further signs of improvement, unemployment remains high in the euro area and, overall, unutilised capacity continues to be sizeable. Moreover, the annual rate of change of MFI loans to the private sector remained negative in MayJune and the necessary balance sheet adjustments in the public and private sectors are likely to continue to dampen the pace of the economic recovery.

The risks surrounding the economic outlook for the euro area remain on the downside. In particular, heightened geopolitical risks, as well as developments in emerging market economies and global financial markets, may have the potential to affect economic conditions negatively, including through effects on energy prices and global demand for euro area products. A further downside risk relates to insufficient structural reforms in euro area countries, as well as weaker than expected domestic demand.

According to Eurostat's flash estimate, euro area annual HICP inflation was 0.4% in July 2014, after 0.5% in June 2014, unchanged from May. Among the main components, services price inflation increased from 1.1% in May to 1.3% in June, while food price inflation fell from 0.1% to -0.2%... This reflects primarily lower energy price inflation, while the other main components of the HICP remained broadly unchanged. On the basis of current information, annual HICP inflation is expected to remain at low levels over the coming months, before increasing gradually during 2015 and 2016. Meanwhile, inflation expectations for the euro area over the medium to long term continue to be firmly anchored in line with our aim of maintaining inflation rates below, but close to, 2%.

The Governing Council sees both upside and downside risks to the outlook for price developments as limited and broadly balanced over the medium term. In this context, we will closely monitor the possible repercussions of heightened geopolitical risks and exchange rate developments.

Turning to the monetary analysis, data for MayJune 2014 continue to point to subdued underlying growth in broad money (M3). Annual growth in M3 was 1.0% in May, ), with annual growth standing at 1.5% in June, compared with 1.0.7% in April.May. The growth of the narrow monetary aggregate M1 moderated to 5.0 % in May, after stood at 5.23% in April.June, up from 5.0% in May. The increase in the MFI net external asset position, reflecting in part the continued interest of international investors in euro area assets, has recently been remained an important factor supporting annual M3 growth.

The annual rate of change of loans to non-financial corporations (adjusted for loan sales and securitisation) wasremained negative at -2.53% in May 2014 June, compared with -2.85% in April.May and -3.2% in February. Lending to non-financial corporations continues to be weak, reflecting the lagged relationship with the business cycle, credit risk, credit supply factors and the ongoing adjustment of financial and non-financial sector balance sheets. At the same time, in terms of monthly flows, loans to non-financial corporations have shown some signs of a stabilisation over recent months, after recording sizeable negative monthly flows earlier in the year. This is consistent with the results of the bank lending survey for the second quarter of 2014 in which banks reported that credit standards for loans to enterprises had eased in net terms. However, they remain rather tight overall, when seen from a historical perspective. In addition, banks reported an improvement in net loan demand by non-financial corporations and households. The annual growth rate of loans to households (adjusted for loan sales and securitisation) was 0.5% in May 2014 June, broadly unchanged since the beginning of 2013.

Against the background of weak credit growth, the ECB's ongoing comprehensive assessment of banks' balance sheets is of key importance. Banks should take full advantage of this exercise to improve their capital and solvency position, thereby supporting the scope for credit expansion during the next stages of the recovery.

To sum up, the economic analysis indicates that the current low level of inflation should be followed by a gradual upward movement in HICP inflation rates towards levels closer to 2%. A cross-check with the signals from the monetary analysis confirms this picture.

As regards fiscal policies, substantial_comprehensive fiscal consolidation in recent years has contributed to reducing budgetary imbalances. Important_Important_structural reforms_reforms have increased competitiveness and the adjustment capacity of countries' labour and product markets. However, significant challenges remain. To strengthen the foundations for sustainable growth and These efforts now need to gain momentum to enhance the euro area's growth potential. Structural reforms should focus on fostering private investment and job creation. To restore sound public finances, euro area countries should proceed in line with the Stability and Growth Pact and should not unravel the progress made with fiscal consolidation, in line with the Stability and Growth Pact, and should proceed with structural reforms in the coming years. Fiscal consolidation should be designed in a growth-friendly manner, and structural reforms should focus on fostering private investment and job creation. way. A full and consistent implementation of the euro area's existing fiscal and macroeconomic surveillance framework is key to bringing down high public debt ratios, to raising potential growth and to increasing the euro area's resilience to shocks.

Finally, I wish to inform you that the Governing Council today announces that the frequency of our monetary policy meetings will change to a six-week cycle, from January 2015. The reserve maintenance periods will be extended to six weeks to match the new schedule. Moreover, we announce our commitment to publish regular accounts of the monetary policy meetings, which is intended to start with the January 2015 meeting. A press release providing more details will be published today at 3.30 p.m.
