

Economic Analysis

Sluggish activity indicators in January-February affirms that China's easing cycle is not over yet

Le Xia

Today China's National Bureau of Statistics (NBS) announced a batch of economic activity indicators for the period of January-February, including industrial production, retail sales and urban fixed asset investment (YTD). Notably, all the outturns in January-February were below both market expectations and their levels of last year-end, indicating that the growth deceleration continues despite a number of recently enacted monetary easing measures, such as January's cut in the Required Reserve Ratio (RRR), February's interest rate cut as well as other unconventional measures. That being said, the disappointing prints of these economic activity indicators have made this year's economic prospective look dimmer. Without further easing measures on both monetary and fiscal fronts, more investors will put a big question mark on the official 7.0% growth target for 2015, which was just announced at the opening of the annual session of National People's Congress (NPC) last week.

Nevertheless, the authorities are still equipped with an ample arsenal of policy options. The headline inflation rate remains tame and the producer price increase stays in negative territory (yesterday the NBS reported that CPI and PPI were 1.4% y/y and -4.8% y/y in February respectively). The authorities could enact more cuts in both interest rates and the RRR to spur domestic demand. Moreover, the lackluster performance of the property market requires more targeted measures to revive housing demand. In this respect, the authorities are likely to further relax some tightening measures on the property market including second-home purchase restrictions and high down-payment requirements. On the fiscal front, this year's fiscal deficit budget target (2.3% as announced in the NPC as well) is not bold enough to tally with a 7.0% growth target at such a juncture. The authorities should expand it to around 3.0% to offset the fiscal consolidation effects at the local government level and bolster growth. All in all, we maintain our growth projection of 7.0% for this year, with some downside risk.

- Economic activity at the beginning of the year fell short of expectations. In particular, industrial production dipped to 6.8% y/y (consensus: 7.7% y/y) in the period of January-February from 7.9% y/y in December (Figure 1). Sectors which are closely related to the property market or suffering from overcapacity problems have been hit the hardest. On the demand side, both consumption and investment demand remained sluggish. Retail sales softened to 10.7% y/y in January-February, compared with 11.9% y/y in December (Consensus: 11.6%) while the total fixed asset investment growth decelerated to 13.9% y/y YTD from 15.7% y/y YTD in December (Consensus: 15.0% YTD) (Figure 2 and 3). Moreover, nationwide land sales plummeted to -31.7% in January-February from -14.0% in December, which doesn't bode well for property-related investment in the coming months.
- Deflation risk is on the rise. The February headline CPI came out yesterday at 1.4% y/y (versus: 0.8% y/y in January) while the PPI growth rate dropped to -4.8% y/y (versus: -4.3% y/y in January). The pickup in CPI was mainly due to the different timing of Chinese New Year (CNY) between 2014 and 2015. Strong food demand around the CNY holidays always tends to boost consumer prices for a short period. That being said, the deflation risk of CPI is still on the rise because the continuous PPI decline, which even deteriorated of late due to falling commodity prices, will unavoidably translate into more downward pressure on consumer prices in the future.

Figure 1
Industrial production dropped further

Source: CEIC and BBVA Research

Figure 2
Retail sales weakened too

Source: CEIC and BBVA Research

Figure 3
Property market is the biggest drag on investment

Source: CEIC and BBVA Research

Figure 4
Deflation risk is on the rise

Source: CEIC and BBVA Research

DISCLAIMER

This document has been prepared by BBVA Research Department, it is provided for information purposes only and expresses data, opinions or estimations regarding the date of issue of the report, prepared by BBVA or obtained from or based on sources we consider to be reliable, and have not been independently verified by BBVA. Therefore, BBVA offers no warranty, either express or implicit, regarding its accuracy, integrity or correctness.

Estimations this document may contain have been undertaken according to generally accepted methodologies and should be considered as forecasts or projections. Results obtained in the past, either positive or negative, are no guarantee of future performance.

This document and its contents are subject to changes without prior notice depending on variables such as the economic context or market fluctuations. BBVA is not responsible for updating these contents or for giving notice of such changes. BBVA accepts no liability for any loss, direct or indirect, that may result from the use of this document or its contents. This document and its contents do not constitute an offer, invitation or solicitation to purchase, divest or enter into any interest in financial assets or instruments. Neither shall this document nor its contents form the basis of any contract, commitment or decision of any kind.

In regard to investment in financial assets related to economic variables this document may cover, readers should be aware that under no circumstances should they base their investment decisions in the information contained in this document. Those persons or entities offering investment products to these potential investors are legally required to provide the information needed for them to take an appropriate investment decision.

The content of this document is protected by intellectual property laws. It is forbidden its reproduction, transformation, distribution, public communication, making available, extraction, reuse, forwarding or use of any nature by any means or process, except in cases where it is legally permitted or expressly authorized by BBVA.