The ECB sticks to its strategy, unmoved by Italy

Sonsoles Castillo / Miguel Jiménez / María Martínez

- The end of the APP is on track, and the Italian crisis is not affecting the ECB's plans
- Risks for economic outlook remains broadly balanced despite weaker momentum
- There was no discussion on the next steps of monetary policy

As widely expected, there were no changes in the ECB's monetary policy stance, as the central bank left key interest rates unchanged and reiterated that it expects the key ECB interest rates to remain "at their present levels at least through the summer of 2019, and in any case for as long as necessary." Regarding the asset purchase programme (APP), the central bank confirmed that the pace of APP has now been reduced to €15B per month, and that it expected to end purchases after December. Besides, the Governing Council (GC) restated that they intend to reinvest the principal payments from maturing securities purchased under the APP "for an extended period of time". The dovish tone remains as Mr Draghi restated that an ample degree of monetary accommodation is still necessary for the continued sustained convergence of inflation to ECB's objective.

On the economic outlook, Mr Draghi was more cautious that in the last few meetings, stating that the euro area's economy is experiencing "weaker momentum" as incoming data has been softer than expected, but is not experiencing a downturn. He clarified that there are "country-specific temporary factors" (such a temporary deceleration in the German car industry), as well as global uncertainties that affect to the whole euro area (e.g., trade conflict, Brexit). Nonetheless, he stated that this weaker momentum is "not enough" to make the GC to change its "baseline scenario" and risks to growth outlook can still be assessed as "broadly balanced." On inflation, Mr Draghi stated that they remain confident about the inflation is gradually reaching their aim, as they are seen negotiated wages keep going up and the labour market keeps expanding.

At the Q&A, the attention was focused on Italy after the European Commission (EC) rejected its Draft 2019 budget plan this week. In this context, Mr Draghi stated that it is not a monetary policy issue, quoting ECB Vice President V. Dombrovskis, who was also attending the ECB meeting: "We have to observe and apply fiscal rules. But we are also seeking a dialogue." Mr Draghi also expects that an agreement between Italy and the EC will be found. He also mentioned that there may be some spillovers from Italy to other non-core countries, but they are limited.

Concerning the roadmap of the monetary policy normalization process, Mr Draghi made clear that the GC did not discuss today what to do next. However, he stated that two members of the GC raised the issue of TLTRO's, which huge redemptions due by June of 2020.

All in all, Mr Draghi remained firm with regards to the end of the ECB's QE. In our view, opening the window to speculation over an extension of the program is risky. If peripheral risk reemerged and interferes in the Eurozone recovery both growth and inflation, the central bank has other measures to implement -as Mr Draghi mentioned today-, including forward guidance, reinvestments, or liquidity measures (LTROs, TLTROs, ..). At the December meeting it is expected that the ECB will announce how the reinvestment framework will be instrumented. While moving forward, the focus will turn on the pace at which interest rates will rise. So far, the ECB seems comfortable with markets expectations.

INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT

Ladies and gentlemen, the Vice-President and I are very pleased to welcome you to our press conference. We will now report on the outcome of today's meeting of the Governing Council, which was also attended by the Commission Vice-President, Mr Dombrovskis.

Based on our regular economic and monetary analyses, we decided to keep the key ECB interest rates unchanged. We continue to expect them to remain at their present levels at least through the summer of 2019, and in any case for as long as necessary to ensure the continued sustained convergence of inflation to levels that are below, but close to, 2% over the medium term.

Regarding non-standard monetary policy measures, we will continue to make net purchases under the asset purchase programme (APP) at the currentnew monthly pace of €30 billion until the end of this month. After September 2018, we will reduce the monthly pace of the net asset purchases to €15 billion until the end of December 2018 and we. We anticipate that, subject to incoming data confirming our medium-term inflation outlook, we will then end net purchases. We intend to reinvest the principal payments from maturing securities purchased under the APP for an extended period of time after the end of our net asset purchases, and in any case for as long as necessary to maintain favourable liquidity conditions and an ample degree of monetary accommodation.

The incoming Incoming information, including our new September 2018 staff projections, broadly confirms our previous assessment of while somewhat weaker than expected, remains overall consistent with an ongoing broad-based expansion of the euro area economy and gradually rising inflation pressures. The underlying strength of the economy continues to support our confidence that the sustained convergence of inflation to our aim will proceed and will be maintained even after a gradual winding-down of our net asset purchases. At the same time, uncertainties relating to rising protectionism, vulnerabilities in emerging markets and financial market volatility have gained more prominence recently remain prominent. Significant monetary policy stimulus is still needed to support the further build-up of domestic price pressures and headline inflation developments over the medium term. This support will continue to be provided by the net asset purchases until the end of the year, by the sizeable stock of acquired assets and the associated reinvestments, and by our enhanced forward guidance on the key ECB interest rates. In any event, the Governing Council stands ready to adjust all of its instruments as appropriate to ensure that inflation continues to move towards the Governing Council's inflation aim in a sustained manner.

Let me now explain our assessment in greater detail, starting with the economic analysis. Euro area real GDP increased by 0.4%, quarter on quarter, in both the first and the second quarter of 2018, following growth at the same rate in the previous quarter. Despite some moderation following the strong growth performance in 2017, the latest economic indicators and survey results. Incoming information, while somewhat weaker than expected, remains overall confirm consistent with our baseline scenario of an ongoing broad-based growth of the euro area economy economic expansion, supported by domestic demand and continued improvements in the labour market. Some recent sector-specific developments are having an impact on the near-term growth profile. Our monetary policy measures continue to underpin domestic demand. Private consumption is supported fostered by ongoing employment gains, which, in turn, partly reflect past labour market reforms, and by growth and rising wages. Business At the same time, business investment is fostered by the supported by solid domestic demand, favourable financing conditions, rising and corporate profitability and solid demand. Housing investment remains robust. In addition, the expansion in global activity is expected to continue, supporting euro area exports, though at a slower pace.

This assessment is broadly reflected in the September 2018 ECB staff macroeconomic projections for the euro area. These projections foresee annual real GDP increasing by 2.0% in 2018, 1.8% in 2019 and 1.7% in 2020. Compared with the June 2018 Eurosystem staff macroeconomic projections, the outlook for real GDP growth has been revised down slightly for 2018 and 2019, mainly due to a somewhat weaker contribution from foreign demand.

The risks surrounding the euro area growth outlook can still be assessed as broadly balanced. At the same time, risks relating to rising protectionism, vulnerabilities in emerging markets and financial market volatility have gained more prominence recently remain prominent.

According to Eurostat's flash estimate, euro Euro area annual HICP inflation was increased to 2.01% in August September 2018, down from 2.1% in July 0% in August, reflecting mainly higher energy and food price inflation. On the basis of current futures prices for oil, annual rates of headline inflation are likely to hover around the current level for over the remainder of the year coming months. While measures of underlying inflation remain generally muted, they have been increasing from earlier lows. Domestic cost pressures are strengthening and broadening amid high levels of capacity utilisation and tightening labour markets, which is pushing up wage growth. Uncertainty around the inflation outlook is receding. Looking ahead, underlying inflation is expected to pick up towards the end of the year and thereafter to increase gradually further over the medium term, supported by our monetary policy measures, the continuing ongoing economic expansion and rising wage growth.

This assessment is also broadly reflected in the September 2018 ECB staff macroeconomic projections for the euro area, which foresee annual HICP inflation at 1.7% in 2018, 2019 and 2020, which is unchanged from the June 2018 Eurosystem staff macroeconomic projections.

Turning to the monetary analysis, broad money (M3) growth declined to 4.0% in July 2018, from 4stood at 3.5% in June September 2018, after 3.4% in August. Apart from some volatility in monthly flows, M3 growth is increasingly supported by bank credit creation. The narrow monetary aggregate M1 remained the main contributor to broad money growth.

The recovery in the growth of loans to the private sector strengthened further, continuing the upward trend observed since the beginning of 2014 is proceeding. The annual growth rate of loans to non-financial corporations stood at rose to 4.3% in September 2018, from 4.1% in July 2018 August, while the annual growth rate of loans to households stood at 3.0%, both 1%, unchanged from Junethe previous month. The euro area bank lending survey for the third quarter of 2018 indicates that loan growth continues to be supported by increasing demand across all loan categories and favorable bank lending conditions for loans to enterprises and loans for house purchase.

The pass-through of the monetary policy measures put in place since June 2014 continues to significantly support borrowing conditions for firms and households, access to financing – in particular for small and medium-sized enterprises – and credit flows across the euro area.

To sum up, a cross-check of the outcome of the economic analysis with the signals coming from the monetary analysis confirmed that an ample degree of monetary accommodation is still necessary for the continued sustained convergence of inflation to levels that are below, but close to, 2% over the medium term.

In order to reap the full benefits from our monetary policy measures, other policy areas must contribute more decisively to raising the longer-term growth potential and reducing vulnerabilities. The implementation of structural reforms in euro area countries needs to be substantially stepped up to increase resilience, reduce structural unemployment and boost euro area productivity and growth potential. Regarding fiscal policies, the broad-based expansion calls for rebuilding fiscal buffers. This is particularly important in countries where government debt is high and for which full adherence to the Stability and Growth Pact is critical for safeguarding sound fiscal positions. Likewise, the transparent and consistent implementation of the EU's fiscal and economic governance framework over time and across countries remains essential to bolster the resilience of the euro area economy. Improving the functioning of Economic and Monetary Union remains a priority. The Governing Council urges specific and decisive steps to complete the banking union and the capital markets union.
