

Market Comment

Market sentiment remained fragile in a volatile August.

- Volatility returned to financial markets in August against the backdrop of trade uncertainty and mounting concerns over a global slowdown.
- Sovereign bond yields declined significantly in August, especially long-term yields. In the US, 10Y Treasury yield dropped sharply by 49 bps dragged down by term premia that plunged to record negative lows, while the 2Y Treasury yield shrank by 33 bps; thus the US curve briefly inverted during this month, reaching its largest spread between 10-2Y since 2007. Moreover, the 30Y Treasury yield hit fresh record lows in August, breaching on the downside 2% level. In Europe, the 10Y German reached new record lows (below -0.7%), while the 30Yr yield entered for the first time into the negative territory, i.e. the hole German curve is in negative territory. The bond yield decline has been widespread in Europe: Spanish 10Y bond yield around 0.10%, risk premia remains around 70-80bps; while Italian risk premia has been more volatile (-24 bps), tightening to 170bps on the back on the new 5S-PD coalition deal. All in all, the size of government debt on negative territory (mainly European and Japanese debt) has increased by 3 tn USD over the summer (reaching a record high of 17 tn USD).
- Market expectations on Fed rate cuts eased somewhat after the July's meeting minutes and less dovish comments from Fed officials. Nonetheless, a 25 bps Fed rate cut is a virtual certainty at the meeting in Sept 18. Regarding the ECB, an implied probability of a 20 bps depo rate cut remains high (around 48%), while a 10 bps depo rate cut is also a virtual certainty in Sept 12.
- Investors sought shelter in safe-haven currencies which outperformed others in August (JPY +2.5% and CHF +1%), while the USD remained unchanged. The euro slightly weakened vs USD (below 1.11, new lows since early 2017). GBP remains volatile and returned to minimum level after the referendum in 2016 after the suspension of the UK Parliament. Elsewhere, EM currencies depreciated across the board (FXJPEMCS -4.0%) with the LACI index (LatAm currencies) falling by 8% (largely affected by the depreciation of the ARG peso, -25% after the unexpected PASO outcome) and the ADXY (Asian currencies) by 2.1%, led by the RMB that declined by 3.7% to 7.15 per USD, reaching 11-year lows.
- In commodities, gold prices benefitted from the risk-off mood (+8.0%), while concerns over global oil demand weighed on the price of Brent crude (-7.0%), hovering around $60 per barrel.
- The trade war escalation weighted on global stock markets. The S&P 500 slipped by 1.4% with cyclical sectors leading the losses, despite some strong earnings in the U.S. retail sector. At the end of the month, the S&P 500 trimmed partially early losses after China indicated it wouldn't immediately retaliate on new U.S. tariffs starting in September. European equities slipped by 2% on average, except for Italian stocks which benefited from a new coalition. Britain's FTSE 100 index underperformed its European peers (-4.7%). The Euro Stoxx banks index shrank by 6%.
