Javier Amador Principal Economist javier.amadord@bbva.com + 5255 5621 3095 Inflation in Brazil was in line with our view of an adjustment in the Selic rate in August and an end to monetary tightening in October. In Mexico retail sales confirmed economic weakness in 1H13.

Brazil - In line with expectations, monthly inflation eased at the beginning of August

In line with expectations, the IPCA-15, a measure of inflation from mid-July to mid-August reached 0.16% MoM (0.15% MoM BBVAe, 0.07% MoM in the previous period). In yearly terms, inflation was 6.15%, implying the second consecutive month with inflation below upper limit of the official target (6.5%). Key factors behind the downside trend in inflation are benign food and transport prices as well as favourable base effects. These inflation figures keep the door open for the BCB to end the current monetary tightening cycle in the coming months. We maintain our outlook of a 50bp upwards adjustment of the Selic rate to 9% in August and an additional (and final) 25bp hike in October.

Mexico - Retail sales confirm economic weakness in 1H13

As we already have the GDP print for the second quarter, the retail sales data for June released yesterday was less relevant as it merely confirmed the weak economic performance in 2Q13. Retail sales increased 0.1% MoM sa in June which implies a 1.9% YoY contraction in annual terms. In our view, July's weak job-creation (5k) suggests that a rebound at the start of the third quarter is unlikely.

What to watch today

Brazil - Unemployment rate (July, 08:00hrs NYT)

We expect the Brazilian labour market to continue to show signs of moderation, with a 6% unemployment rate in July. Employment at historical lows is a driver of the deterioration of private consumption in recent months.

Mexico - Inflation (first fortnight of August, 09:00hrs NYT)

We expect inflation data for the first two weeks of August to confirm the downward trend in year-on-year inflation. In fortnightly terms, we expect to see an upswing in core inflation (0.15% vs. 0.03% in July) after the end of retailers' discounts in July and the seasonal increase in school fees; however, in annual terms, we expect it to decline to 2.43% (2.50% in July), representing an all-time low. Meanwhile, we expect a 0.14% FoF increase in headline inflation.
