... moving away from Europe nearer the US but with global risk premium exposure

Next week sees the release of 3Q11 GDP figures which, if near the expected 1.2% q/q, should have a similar trajectory this year to those of our main trading partner's (the US) output. Output should have gone from less to more, reflecting the close cyclical links between the two economies and their exposure to common shocks. In turn, the Eurozone area has an opposite outlook in terms of GDP, moving from higher to lower growth over 2011 and with a forecast for practically a standstill or even decline in output in the last quarter of the year. This situation, alongside the close direct contagion channels from Europe to Mexico¹, fails to rule out downward risks for our economy if sovereign debt in the Eurozone continues to increase the sense of persistent global risk. In other words, if this were to mean the start of a period where the availability of finance is too low to cover the solvent demand for funds at reasonable rates.

If global uncertainty continues, potential is high for foreign capital outflows.

The lack of component factors to ease global uncertainty means continued downgrades to financial assets on domestic markets. This time around, the European debt crisis has affected domestic fixed income instruments which, by showing a positive correlation with the MXN, points to the risk aversion sentiment worsening.

Calendar: Indicators

GDP, 3Q11 (Tuesday, November 22)

Forecast: 1.2% q/q 4.2% y/y Consensus: N.A. Previous: 1.1% q/q 3.6% y/y

The third quarter ends with better-than-expected output indicators than at the start of the period. The surprise negative figures in the August IGAE were mainly due to particularly depressed industrial output (-1.1% for the month, the lowest since mid-2009) and were compensated in September with positive growth of 1.8% with a good rise in main sectors: manufacturing and construction (1.5% and 2.5% m/m respectively).

In turn, a key indicator for the service sector (64% of the economy's added value) on available income in the formal sector continued to see well-paced growth in the third quarter: an average of 5% for the year in the quarter with positive contributions from both employment and real wages.

In all, the quarterly forecast for GDP in the 3Q11, in accordance with the MICA-BBVA model, is 1.2% q/q, 0.2 pp above estimates with the information available at the start of the quarter. In the same vein, we expect output to slow in the last quarter of the year to a level near 0.3%, with a probable range between (0.0 and 0.6% q/q). In total, 3.8% for the whole of 2011.

Inflation for the first two weeks in November (Thursday, November 24)

Forecast: 0.98% bi-weekly 3.44% y/y Consensus: 0.76% bi-weekly Previous: 0.67% m/m 3.2% y/y

We have increased our growth outlook for prices this month due to the higher-than-expected increase in electricity prices in the face of the end to warm season subsidies and pressures in energy costs. In addition, a seasonal upswing in fruit and vegetable prices will be seen - a normal occurrence given the season. We expect core inflation to see a 0.15% q/q increase (3.12% y/y). This change means that the core component continues to not show pressures in services and non-food goods thanks to the economy's comfortable resources. This avoids pressures on demand and favors a lack of any pass-on to the exchange rate. We expect inflation to be around 3.48% at the end of the year.

No improvement in the global mood, markets await decisive action in the euro zone

Last week fears of systemic risks in the euro zone intensified when Germany and France failed to reach a political agreement on the role of the ECB as lender of last resort for EU sovereigns in the Eurozone (EZ). Generic 10-year bonds for most of the EZ countries (other than Greece, Ireland and Portugal) posted highs in their spreads against the German Bund. There was a notable fall in demand for Spanish 10-year bonds, and their yield was up to 6.975% (vs. 5.433% at the previous auction). This news, together with statements by Fitch on the risk of banking contagion to the U.S., pushed the favorable US cyclical data (industrial output, unemployment benefit and housing) and the positive valuation of Portugal by the Troika into the background. Markets will keep a close eye on the upcoming Ecofin meetings.

If global uncertainty continues, potential is high for foreign capital outflows

In general, the global scenario continues to favor an exit from risk assets which, this time around, even affected domestic fixed income instruments which, by showing a positive correlation with the MXN, points to the risk aversion sentiment worsening. We believe the range dynamics remain. Nonetheless, the potential for foreign outflows (if the rumors on contagion in the European periphery continue) is high and the devaluation could even be more aggressive. In all, we continue to forecast a moderation in risk premiums toward the end of the month. In this sense, we maintain our forecast of appreciation toward the 13.20 level. Over the week, they could fluctuate between 13.4 and 13.7.

In the face of EZ tensions and favorable US economic data, the Mexican stock market moved down, albeit less than in developed markets

Although the epicenter of turbulence is the EMU, positive readings in cyclical indicators came from the US. This meant the weekly contraction on the Mexican stock market was similar to the Dow Jones and saw a better performance than European markets. We continue to expect market volatility in anticipation of proposals for fiscal consolidation in the U.S. (November 23) and the Ecofin meetings at the end of the month.

Technical Analysis

IPC Stock Market Index

The IPC ended the week with a slight bounce from 36,000pts, a psychological support level. However, we believe that there is still a high likelihood of it seeking out the 35,600pts level where it would hit a more important support - the area where the 30- and 200-day rolling averages come together and where we would increase our short-term positions. The alternate scenario would be for the market to maintain the bounce and hit above the 10-day rolling average (36,855pts) which would mark an entry signal. In both instances, we would consider 38,000pts as a target level.

Previous Rec.: This keeps the risk of short-term profit-taking high with supports at 36,000 and 35,600 pts. We have therefore maintained a low short-term investment level.

MXN

Volatile week with the dollar returning to the MXN13.75 zone. The bounce could persist to the MXN13.85 zone where it would hit the second standard deviation with a return to that from two months ago. The first support now sits at MXN13.55.

Previous Rec.: If it continues to trade in the high part of this tranche, we maintain a downward outlook for the dollar to floor levels at MXN13.20 and MXN13.00.

Source: BBVA Bancomer, Bloomberg

3Y M BOND

3-YEAR M BOND: (yield): Again comes in above the short-term rolling average. The bounce could persist with a target at 4.9% and support at 4.6%.

Previous Rec.: We expect a bounce toward levels around 4.7% and then 4.9%.

Source: BBVA Bancomer, Bloomberg

10 YEAR M BOND

10-YEAR M BOND: (yield): Major upswing breaking through the 30-day rolling average. Important resistance up to 6.8% with support at 6.3%.

Previous Rec.: If it breaks 6.35%, it could set a trend change and seek 6.8%.
