

Daily Flash

Asia

China's interest rate cut announced late yesterday failed to buoy markets today, as concerns over global growth appear to be dominating investor sentiment. Nearly all markets finished down today, ending a three day rally, with the Nikkei declining by 2.1%. This weekend will feature important data out of China, which could set the tone for next week's market moves. In the meantime, speculation has risen that China's May activity indicators will be weak given the timing of China's rate cut (see Weekly Indicator below).

China's bank lending rates fall on the PBoC's rate cut

On the heels of the PBoC's rate cut announced yesterday (see our latest China Economic Flash), China's five largest commercial banks adjusted their one-year lending rate downwards by 25 bps. At the same time, they appear to be taking advantage of the new flexibility allowed in deposit rates (in light of the new permissible 10% discount from the benchmark rate) by keeping their deposit rates unchanged. This has led to a narrowing of lending spreads. Other medium and small-sized banks may adopt the same approach in the coming days (or even raise deposit rates above current levels) as they compete for deposits.

Korea leaves rates unchanged, as expected

For the 12th straight month, the Bank of Korea left interest rates on hold at 3.25% (consensus: 3.25%). With inflation remaining well-contained in May (2.5% y/y, towards the bottom of policymakers' 2%-4% target range), upcoming exports and domestic demand data will need to be watched closely, as the probability of a rate cut continues to increase given the sluggish global environment. If inflation expectations ease from their current level (of 3.7% y/y), this may provide further support for a rate cut in the coming months.

Japan's current account surplus shrinks on global downturn

Japan's current account surplus fell in April to a seasonally adjusted 288.6 billion yen (consensus: 615.6 billion yen) from previous 785.5 billion yen in March. Japan's exports have been falling due to the global slowdown and a strong yen, while imports have been steady because of the ongoing reconstruction efforts. Looking ahead, we expect Japan's current account surplus to remain at around 2-3% of GDP over the medium term, due to strong investment income inflows.

Briefly noted:

- Following the recent decline in oil prices, China announced it will cut gasoline and diesel prices by the most since 2008. Gasoline prices will be 530 yuan less per ton, while diesel prices will fall by 510 yuan/ton.
- Vietnam cut the discount rate and the refinancing rate today, by 100 bps to 9% and 11% respectively. Also, Vietnam will also lower the deposit rate cap to 9% from 11% in a bid to lower banks' funding costs and encourage lending amidst a credit crunch that is hurting many SMEs.
- After this week's interest rate cuts in Australia and China, next week will be packed with monetary policy meetings (Indonesia, Thailand, Philippines and Japan), though we don't expect to see any monetary easing. Also, next week China's credit data for May will be released.

Indicator of the Week

China: Industrial output for May (June 9)

Forecast: 10.5% y/y Consensus: 9.8% y/y Prior: 9.3% y/y

China's growth momentum moderated further in April, prompting the government to increase policy support recently. New measures have been geared towards increasing consumption and investment in infrastructure, while the central bank also decided to cut the reserve requirement ratio by 50bps on May 12th. Taking these supportive policies into account, we expect the industrial production index, a key gauge of China's growth momentum, to improve slightly in May to 10.5% in year-on-year terms, up from 9.3% in April. In addition to IP, several other important indicators will also be released next week, including inflation, retail sales, investment, and credit aggregates. Headline inflation is expected to remain low at 3.3%y/y in May (from 3.4%y/y in April) due to easing food and fuel prices, providing room for further policy easing in the coming months, if necessary.
