HICP inflation slowed in November once again driven by lower energy prices, but also by lower inflation in services

- HICP inflation declined by 0.3pp to 2.2% y/y in November, in line with our below-consensus expectation

The growth in energy prices declined to 5.7% y/y in November from 8.0% y/y in the previous month, reducing its contribution to annual inflation rate by somewhat more than 0.2pp to 0.6pp. Inflation in fresh food also declined by 0.2pp to 4.1% y/y, in line with expectations, and thus interrupting the significant upward trend observed since mid-year, although these still high inflation rates are likely to persist in coming months.

- Core inflation slowed slightly in November, remaining at 1.6% y/y due to rounding

Inflation in services declined by 0.1pp to 1.6% y/y, somewhat more than expected, after hovering around 1.8% y/y from late 2011, likely reflecting the weakening of domestic demand by year-end. In addition, this explains the remaining 0.1pp reduction in inflation in November. With respect to the other components of core inflation, inflation in both non-energy industrial goods and processed food remained unchanged at 1.1% and 2.4% y/y, respectively, as expected.

- Headline inflation is expected to remain stable in December

Although energy inflation is expected to moderate slightly again, this should be offset by higher prices in food prices, due to seasonal effects, while inflation in both services and non-energy industrial goods is likely to remain unchanged. Nonetheless, the latest information of the Bulletin Pétrolier showed a further moderation in fuel prices, and thus a somewhat higher slowing inflation at the end of the year cannot be ruled out. Overall, headline inflation will average 2.5% and core inflation 1.8% in 2012.

- Looking forward, we expect inflation to fall below the ECB target by the second quarter

In particular, inflation is likely to slow more rapidly at the beginning of 2013 as a result of a significant base effect in energy prices after increasing sharply a year ago, while core inflation might remain broadly stable. We maintain our inflation forecast for 2013 as whole, with headline at 1.8% and core inflation at 1.5%.
