Market Comment | Stocks edged up while demand for safe-haven assets eased

Global Financial Markets Unit 19 Apr 2017

BBVA Research

- Financial markets showed moderate optimism today, after several days of investor cautiousness, as the price of safe-haven assets declined slightly, with gold, the CHF, the JPY and safer bonds all declining, while risk asset prices inched up, with equities increasing across the board, underpinned by corporate earnings results.
- After the UK parliament vote in favour of early elections on 8 June (see), the GBP remained steady at its highest level since October, dragging down the FTSE 100, the only European equity index that fell during today's session.
- In Europe, peripheral risk premiums narrowed, favoured by a slight decline in risk aversion, while inflation in the EZ in March was confirmed at 1.5% (see), allaying concerns of a potential spike in European inflation.
- Despite the fact that expectations for US reflationary policies cooled recently, the USD recovered some ground during today's session, although the DXY is still below 100 points. Meanwhile, EM currencies depreciated across the board due to a stronger dollar.
- Oil prices declined despite the OPEC secretary general's remarks (see), saying that all oil producers that take part in the supply cut are committed to bringing inventories down. He also said that March compliance rates were better than in February.
